The firm I was with would not increase my salary, so I made up my mind to return to Keokuk, but being a lover of fine acting I came to Chicago to see Booth. But I was sadly mistaken. In all Shakspeare's (sic) works I find but one man to compete with Booth, and that is Iago. Every line I write I prance the floor as though I was playing Hamlet. I'm sorry I came here, for I think the hangman has a rope for me. Remember me to your mother and sister.

Reading this note, the impression would emain that the writer was an incoherent lunatic, but conversing with him as he sat coolly in prison and talked collectedly about his deed, the almost irresistible conclusion drawn from his manner is that he is perfectly sane and acted with full knowledge and well-considered purpose. His story is that he belongs in Keokuk, but has been travelling for a St. Louis dry-goods house; that about three years ago Booth wronged a friend of his (whether lady or gentleman he does not state); and that becoming cognizant of the wrong about two and one half years ago be determined to avenge it. He had only met Booth once since that time, and that was on the streets in St. Louis, and was not prepared.

THE NEW YORK TIMES'S ACCOUNT. CHICAGO, April 23 .- An unsuccessful at tempt was made to-night to assassinate Edwin Booth, the eminent tragedian. The play was " Richard II.," and when the last act had been reached, and Mr. Booth held the stage alone, in the prison scene, the audience was startled by two pistol-shots in quick succession. It was at first supposed that they might have been the result of accident, either on the stage or on the part of some one of the spectators. gence was spread among the audience that it was, in fact, an attempted murder, but speech Mr. Blaine moved to strike out the the gratifying fact was also apparent that As soon as the shots had been fired Mr. Booth excused himself to the audience, and ing certain trials in South Carolina, in retired to his dressing-room, where his wife, who was in a state of great excitement, was in waiting. As soon as he had quieted her fears he returned to the stage, resumed his line, and finished the play.

At the time of the shooting the stage was quite dark, and it is probably owing to this fact that the assassin missed in his aim, and the bullets, instead of entering the person of the actor, penetrated the scenery and buried themselves in the stage floor, from whence they were extracted after the curtain fell. The man who fired the shots was at once arrested. He occupied a seat in the second balcony. He gave his name as Mark | wedding on the 11th of June next. It is stated report of having received such letters when in Detroit lately was untrue.

Mr. Booth declines to make any statement at length to-night owing to the illness of his wife and his desire to be left in quiet with her. The supposition is that Gray is some half-crazy fool, or was drunk at the time he committed the act. Mr. Booth says that he knows nothing of the man Gray, and that he had no idea he was being fired at until informed by one of the people behind the CHICAGO, April 23 .- There is intense excitement here to-night over a during and desperate attempt to assassinate Edwin Booth, the great tragedian. He was playing upon the stage of McVicker's Theatre in one of his familiar parts, when a man who was in the gallery fired two shots at him just as the last scene was closing.

The audience, the members of the orchestra, and the dramatic company, were thrown into the utmost confusion.

Mr. Booth escaped all harm, and the would-be murderer was immediately arrested. He announced his name as Mark Gray, and said that he was a dry-goods clerk employed in St. Louis. He gave no reasons for his act.

The scene in the theatre recalled a similar one which occurred in Washington some fourteen years ago, and terminated in the most afflicting tragedy that has ever befallen the people of this country.
